Director of Campus Broadcasting Station

Dear Sir:

As a new carrier current station, WLTI has faced many broadcasting problems within the past year. Some of these problems were easily rectified, others were not; however, we did receive a host of suggestions as a result of these problems and we have sought to investigate these suggestions whenever possible.

One of these suggestions had to do with the formation of an educational network to which both small and large college stations could subscribe. The advantages are obvious, in that the combined facilities and programming potentialities are, of necessity, greater than those available to any single station. The object is to present to even the smallest station the very best in programs so that these stations may more easily compete with commercial broadcasting organizations in their quest for campus listeners.

We are, therefore, interested in details on the existence of such a network, if any, and if not, we would like to suggest its formation. We are very interested in discussing the project with representatives of other stations in the New York--New England area over the summer so that if it is feasible work may begin in the fall. We may be contacted during the summer at our school address, and meetings with one of our representatives can be arranged in New York City, Lowell, and other locations including the Mid-West.

Yours very truly,

Edward L. Bonacci
